to keep the story honest, i sold on this day after market had been open an hour or two, based on the date, proved a fraction early.

Given the next days bar, any trader should really exit on such a reversal and just take your profit.

DAILY - ARITHMETIC - Health and Retail Services

I am a buyer here, the day after the crossing of a past double top (daily chart - even better if it was weekly). I recall in this case, the stock was momentarily suspended on the open, which usually leads to a fall for a while, so i bought half the position, and then resolved to buy the other half if the stock could close the day above the previous days high, which it did. This then keeps me out of stocks not continuing higher.
